Welcome to our BUTTERFLY WING inspired garden

We hope you will enjoy observing various butterflies floating about in the warm summer air. If you happen to see a butterfly land on a marigold, zinnia or milkweed, you may see it sipping nectar from the flower. As she opens her wings you will see lines or patterns of black and other bright and colorful spots.

All butterfly wings are a natural, symmetrical and geometric display of color and shapes that communicate information such as a warning to predators, camouflage or a signal to a potential mate.

We welcome all butterflies to stop, rest their wings on our brightly colored flowers, take a drink, feed on the nectar and spread lots of pollen to other nearby plants.
